Self-profile Essay

Hello there, my name is Mark Chigozie Mordi from Lagos, Nigeria. I am currently studying for a master's in software design with Artificial Intelligence at TUS. Still, I did my bachelor's degree in Mechatronics Engineering in Nigeria because I want to work in the field of robotics and automation. I am relatively quiet by nature but can be quite talkative around the right people. I think of myself as a creative and curious person, and I like to see the good in things around me.

If I were to reflect on the few positive aspects of myself, I would most likely say I like the way I can have a calm demeanour even when things around me do not seem to go well. This characteristic has helped me through so many situations and I am glad about that because it allows me to see the good in most aspects of my life. It also gives me a can-do attitude.

My second positive reflection about myself would be the love and encouragement I receive from my family and friends for I believe they are part of the reason I can accomplish the things I do. They have helped me grow into the type of person I am today. My Mother has been a major influence on who I am, she taught me the right thing about being a good and God-fearing person.

I can't talk about my positive reflections without mentioning some negative reflections about myself. A major aspect of myself I consider negative or wish to change would be my avoidance to improve on my written and spoken English. My fear to improve on my vocabulary has caused me to avoid things involving public speaking and essay writing. Even though I consider myself a creative person, I still feel unable to express my thoughts in writing properly.

In conclusion, all the positives in myself have given me a sense of gratitude for how far I have come and to remember not to take them for granted while my negative reflections show me aspects of myself that need improvement.
